Quintuplets Bloom At Night

The night blooming cereus, sweet scented cactus, native to South America and the West Indies, appears to be right at home at the home of Mrs. Edna Blackwell, Appomattox. Mrs. Blackwell, above, shows five of the sweet scented blooms almost at full "spread" which will fold up and fade before morning. All five blooms had opened the night before. Mrs. Blackwell pointed out the "star" and "nativity scene" within each large bloom. "Catching" the cereus in bloom meant a "night watch" for Mrs. Blackwell, and a hurried call to the cameraman to snap the rather unusual sight of five "night bloomers" all at once.

Neighborhood Show Helps Rescue Squad

Guess What's In Gorgeous Guords

Maybe they're not exactly "gorgeous gourds" — but they're worth a try at a home made cake! Guess how many seeds are in the old gourd at Sneed's Pharmacy, Rt. 460 West or the old gourd at Chandler's Barber Shop, Atwood Street. Best guess wins a cake and the gourd, of course on Saturday, August 15. Willis Inge grew the gourds—varnished them and donated them to Rescue Squad Day. All proceeds will help the county Rescue Squad in their efforts to complete their new building and equip it for service to people needing help Fun and prizes and good times for all the family on Rescue Squad Day.

Upon completion of the training, he will return to his local reserve unit for regular training sessions.

If You Employ Farm Workers Keep Adequate, Accurate Records

If you employ farm workers, either full time or part time, it is necessary that you keep sufficient records to meet the requirements for filing social security returns. Any farm worker who works on 20 or more days during a year for one farm employer must be reported for social security purposes if he was paid on a time basis such as by the hour, day or week. This is true without regard to the amount of wages paid.

Any farm worker who is paid cash wages of as much as $150 during the year by one employer must also be reported for social security purposes without regard to the length of time worked. The farm employer is held responsible under this law for the total tax due which amounts to 7 one-fourth percent of the cash wages paid.

The farm employer is authorized to withhold the employee portion which amount to 3-five-eighth percent from the wages paid to the worker. If he fails to do this and the farm worker meets either of the two tests above, he is still required to pay the full tax.

In order to comply with this law not be unduly inconvenienced financially, a farm employer should withhold the social security tax from any wages paid part time employees as well as wages paid full time employees. If, at the end of the year, the worker was not paid as much as $150 cash wages and did not meet the 20 day test, the amount withheld must be given to the employee from whom it was withheld.

Fruit and vegetable growers frequently employ harvest labor on a piece work basis rather than a time basis. The 20 day test does not apply to these piece work employees but if they are paid $150 or more during the year, the social security tax must be paid.

It is necessary to have the name, address, and social security account number of all workers as well as a record of the time worked and the amount paid in order to comply with all of the requirements of the law. Such records can more readily be made when the individual is first employed.

The social security number should be copied from the worker's social security card. If he has no card, an application for such card can be secured from most post offices. This form should be completed and directed to the nearest social security office. The postmaster can also furnish the proper address for mailing.

Sometimes a farmer will contract with a crew leader to furnish labor for a certain job. In such cases, the crew leader is generally considered the employer and responsible for the social security tax but it is necessary that the farm operator make a record of the name, address, and employer identification number of the crew leader in order to protect himself from liability.

There is no way to avoid this recordkeeping without risking running afoul of the law.

8 Lb. Cucumber

From seed given to Stuart Fuller by a Frenchman, Stuart and his father grew this 8½ pound cucumber in their garden in Appomattox. E. N. (Skeeter) Fuller is shown above with the giant cuke, 26½ inches long and 13½ inches in diameter. The seed came from Maurice Reginoano of French Tunisia, North Africa, now working in Lynchburg. Reginoano's cucumbers planted in Lynchburg failed to come up. So now it Stuart's turn to be generous. He plans to share his cucumber seeds so both families can grow the giants next year.
